HONORS THESIS

The Honors thesis is a work of original research or scholarly or creative activity in which Honors students work closely with faculty members to investigate topics in greater detail than is possible in regular classes. Completing a thesis is both a challenging and rewarding undertaking, and a successfully completed thesis is often persuasive evidence to admissions and fellowship committees of a student’s potential for outstanding performance in graduate or professional schools or in challenging and competitive fields.

The Honors thesis is usually completed in two consecutive semesters and is followed by a capstone course during which students will present their research, assess The Honors Program and their participation in it, and devise and execute a plan to improve The Honors Program.
